Polyphenol-containing plant extract from the prickly pear [opuntia ficus-indica]. The prickly pear is known as a superfruit and supports general well-being in the context of calorie-reduced diets.

Citrus fruit extracts such as Sinetrol® (grapefruit, orange) and Morosil® (blood orange) are well-established ingredients in dietary supplements that have been investigated in efficacy studies.

Sinetrol® contains naringin and neohesperidin, two polyphenols from orange and grapefruit. Polyphenols are also known as secondary plant compounds because they can influence metabolism in a variety of ways. Sinetrol® also contains guarana, which was already used and valued by indigenous peoples as an energy-providing substance.

Capsaicin from cayenne pepper and chlorogenic acid from green coffee are further metabolism-activating substances that are widely used in dietary supplements as part of a calorie-reduced diet.

Choline contributes to a normal fat metabolism, zinc supports the maintenance of a normal carbohydrate and fatty acid metabolism.
